CRUISER ON BOARD

Admiral Byrd May Join Ship in Philadelphia, or Else Fly To Panama

BOSTON, Nov. 15.—(INS)—The oft-delayed Byrd Antarctic expedition got under way at 6.15 a. m. today when the North Star, first of the two expedition vessels, swung away from the Army base on the first lap of her 12,000 mile journey.

Sailing of the supply ship was delayed until this morning by the seven-hour task of lashing the 27-ton snow cruiser to the deck and checking the ship's compass.

First scheduled stop for the "North Star" was Philadelphia, where two airplanes are to be added to an already heavy cargo of supplies.

Admiral Byrd planned to join the "North Star" in Philadelphia after watching the departure of the flagship "Bear." In the event he is unable to board the "North Star" in Philadelphia, he will join her at Panama after flying south from Boston.

Grundy's Clock Tower

(By "The Stroller")

When this column was started the original idea was to publish interesting extracts from the gossip that is always prevalent in and about a community. But as the years have passed the column has become more and more popular and its original purpose somewhat changed. Today it has become more or less of informational value. Questions are often propounded which are sometimes difficult to answer.

For instance: Sometime ago a group of men were engaged in conversation when one of them referred to the clock tower on the Grundy Mills. He said the tower was erected when the seven-story warehouse was built. Another disputed the statement and contended that the clock tower was not erected until sometime after the seven-story warehouse was completed. A third member of the group said that he remembered that the tower was in the course of construction at the time the Pennsylvania Railroad Company was building its new elevated roadway through the town. A fourth member spoke up and said: "Suppose we ask the Stroller to settle the matter for us." And so in due season the question was submitted.

The answer follows: The seven-story warehouse at the Grundy Mills was started in 1909 and finished in 1910. The clock tower was not built at this time. In 1911, during the time the Railroad Company was building its elevated roadway through the town, a three-story building was erected adjoining and connecting with the seven-story warehouse. This is the building in which the office is located. It was during the construction of this building (1911) that the tower was built. It will be interesting to know that George Inskip, who was the Superintendent of Construction on these buildings is now occupying a prominent position as Building Inspector for the State of New York and has under him a crew of ten or twelve engineers.

The situation was described tersely by today's war communique which said: "There was reduced activity during the night."

NATHAN HOFFMAN DIES SUDDENLY IN AUTOMOBILE

Found Slumped Behind Wheel In Atlantic City; On Business Trip

FORMERLY OF BRISTOL

Nathan Hoffman, 40, a former Bristol resident, was found dead in his automobile on Atlantic Avenue, Atlantic City, N. J., last evening. Death was attributed to a heart attack, and examination proved, according to physicians, that Mr. Hoffman had suffered complications.

The deceased, who made his home on Bristol Pike, Andalusia, had gone to Atlantic City, on business. When first noticed by Patrolman Albert Freeman, of the shore resort, Hoffman's car was on the side of Atlantic avenue, with both right wheels on the sidewalk. The machine had been halted about a foot from a telephone pole, and the lights were still burning.

Hoffman was slumped behind the wheel, but was immediately taken to a hospital, where he was pronounced dead.

The late Mr. Hoffman formerly conducted stores here, operating a cut-rate drug store, and later a home-furnishing establishment. He is survived by his wife, Dorothy Newcomb Hoffman; a son, Nelson, aged seven years; his parents, Mr. and Mrs. A. Hoffman, Mill street; and four brothers.

The body will be removed to Philadelphia.

Rescue Squad Takes One Ambulance Out of Service

Jesse Carr, chief of the Croydon station of the Bucks County Rescue Squad, announces that the Squad "regrets that it has become necessary in the interest of safety to discontinue the use of their No. 2 Packard invalid car, due to its being so completely worn out mechanically it would be too dangerous to keep it on the street."

"The invalid car has been in service for the past 3½ years. The need of two ambulances to properly cover the large area served has been proven so many times. The squad will make every effort to maintain our services on schedule with our one ambulance, until we can purchase another ambulance or invalid car to replace the old one. We do ask the public to bear with us until we can make that replacement."

TURKEY CARD PARTY

THE GREAT GAME OF POLITICS

By FRANK R. KENT

"Distributed by McNaught Syndicate, Inc."

A Nation of Old People?

Washington, Nov. 14.

Eggs game is now under the head of "finished business" puts it there.

ON the contrary, thoughtful men, observing the size of the favoring vote in both these States and appreciating the tremendous emotional appeal inherent in these schemes, are quite convinced that instead of effectually checking the movement, an impetus has been given it. It is their conviction that proof of this will be afforded in the next session of Congress, in the two national conventions and in the campaign to follow.

That there will be gestures made toward the old-age vote in Congress and in the conventions can be set down as a certainty. The number and solidity of these voters are far too great not to be angled for by the politicians. They are so numerous a bloc that neither party nationally can afford to let the other make the only bid for it. Neither, of course, will indorse, or even suggest, such monstrous proposals as were put before the voters in the last election—but each will express extreme solicitude for the old-age voters and pledge itself to move toward some "adequate provision" for indigent men and women over 60.

Earthquake Distinctly Felt In This Vicinity

The earthquake which last night rocked an area in four States was distinctly felt in Bristol shortly after 9.45. Windows rattled and dishes clattered as houses shook.

(By International News Service)

Except for the jangled nerves of hundreds of alarmed residents of Southern New Jersey, Eastern Pennsylvania and scattered sections of Delaware and Maryland, no damage of any consequence was reported today as a result of the 10-second earthquake which shook the region at 9.54 last night.

Frightened by the swaying of their houses, hundreds of persons swamped police stations throughout the affected region with telephone calls seeking assurance of their safety. Within 30 minutes, Philadelphia City Hall was besieged by an estimated 8,000 telephone queries.

Both Franklin Institute at Philadelphia and Fordham University at New York fixed the time of the quake at 9.54 and its duration at 10 seconds.

The Institute reported the center appeared to be at Westville, N. J., and that the quake raced along a 100-mile front.

Father Joseph Lynch, in charge of the Fordham seismograph, reported the center at about 100 to 105 miles south of New York City.

"Intensity was extremely mild," Father Lynch said. "The amplification was a little more than we would get from a quarry blast at that distance."

There were many stories of persons being almost shaken out of their beds, pictures and light fixtures swaying, and from Baltimore of furniture being overturned.

The chief alarm was displayed in several communities in Southern New Jersey where the quake seemed to center. Frightened members quickly emptied two lodge halls in Vineland, N. J., it was reported, and several persons there fled their homes, believing their furnaces had exploded.

DOYLESTOWN, Nov. 15.—Howard B. Wright, 18, formerly of near Sellersville, now East Stroudsburg, who pleaded guilty to stealing a bicycle before Judge Calvin S. Boyer in criminal court in October, was granted a parole Monday.

Judge Boyer sentenced Wright to serve not less than two months nor more than two years in the County Prison on October 2, following his arrest by Chief of Police Frank Hallman, of Sellersville.

The young man was granted a parole on condition that he go to East Stroudsburg and reside with his parents, notifying Probation Officer Horace E. Gwinner before he changes his employment or address. He told the Court his grandfather had procured employment for him in a paper mill. The costs of the prosecution amounted to $33.45 and were directed paid by the county.

Cases for argument court were marked for Monday, Tuesday, today and tomorrow with President Judge Hiram H. Keller and Judge Calvin S. Boyer presiding.

NO PLACE FOR POLITICS

Now if ever would seem to be the time to put an end to the pork-barrel "plan" by which the United States Army is scattered over the country in scores of obsolete posts maintained only because of the pressure of local business for their retention.

The country is about to be asked to spend many additional millions on the Army on grounds of defense necessity, arising from conditions abroad. It seems certain a positive stand, taken now on the same grounds, should sweep aside easily the petty selfishness that alone has kept the pork-barrel posts going.

The present location of Army garrisons has been determined primarily by politics and only secondarily by military judgment. Many present posts were established on the old frontiers in the days of the Indian wars. Wholly lacking in modern military significance, their maintenance involves wasteful expenditure and a disposition of the troops which is a positive obstacle to proper training.

The General Staff long has had in its files a carefully worked out plan for housing the Army at points where joint maneuvers, particularly with the National Guard, would be facilitated. This last is an absolute defense necessity, for officers must have training, now all but impossible, in the handling of large bodies of troops.

Not only, however, has the Army plan been shelved; it has not even been submitted to Congress, so sure were successive Administrations that proposing to abolish even a single present post would be politically fatal. Can you imagine the squawk that would be given voice by Senators Nye and Frazier if it were decided to abandon the fort at Bismarck, North Dakota? Yet the only practical value of this post is as a monument to the spot from which Custer departed to make his last stand.

This should be no longer a deterrent. The country is in no mood to let pipsqueak politics interfere with the national defense on which it is lavishing vast sums from an already empty Treasury.

IT ISN'T CRICKET

A Swiss court has just convicted a personable young dancer and her boy friend of espionage and sentenced them, respectively, to five and three years in prison.

It is quite natural that with the outbreak of hostilities in Europe there should be a wave of espionage and trials for the crime. A spy is a very loathsome sort of creature unless he or she is spying for our side, such as Nathan Hale or Belle Boyd. It goes on in every country and has been going on ever since Caleb was sent ahead to spy out the land of Canaan.

But there is something repulsive just the same in any effort to weaken the defense of little Switzerland, which has been able to maintain its liberty for more than 600 years. Naturally, Switzerland has no intention of attacking any other country and aid to an invasion of that country by another power just doesn't seem to be cricket.

Where observers spoke awhile back of 15 million armed Europeans they speak now of 20. Either the boys are putting on their winter statistics, or five million Germans have armed themselves with bombs.

Here and There In Bucks County Towns

Doylestown, early Sunday morning of a heart attack.

He had apparently been in good health up until the time of his death and was out with friends as late as midnight Saturday when he walked to his home. A short time later he felt ill and a physician was summoned, but death followed in a few minutes.

A native of Buckingham, Michener moved to this section some years ago when he was employed by the Pennsylvania State Highway Department, principally in road construction work. During his years of service in Doylestown, an appointment that he

Butter-kissed waffles. (That was for Sunday twelve o'clock "brunch," and was accompanied by grilled sausages and coffee, with a cigarette or two afterwards.)

These intimate little meals were fairly inexpensive, but they took time and planning. Always, Moira felt amply repaid by Tarry's hearty eating, and he never failed to praise her cooking.

Glowingly replete then, he would talk about himself. She encouraged that. Her tiny apartment, she told herself, was his only real home. To make it so attractive to him that he would come often—that was her ambition. And surely the inevitable time would arrive when he would see that he could not do without her, and they would join finances in a modern working marriage.

Her love would surmount his natural pride about her working, and she would go on at the shop, anyway, until a baby came. It was a transfiguring thought!

If a still small voice of common-sense informed her that their conversations always centered around Tarry, that he showed little interest in her doings, she would thrust that thought from her mind. A handsome young man was always egotistic. She wouldn't have him different. It was her métier to sympathize and listen.

He very seldom took her out these days.

She would gladly have gone to the Automatons to save his pocket-book. Walks in the Park cost nothing. One could really have an awful lot of fun in New York, with a congenial companion, without actually spending. But it was hard for Tarry, accustomed as he once was to flinging money to the winds in nightclubs and the most elegant of restaurants, to accustom himself to what he called "mingling with the hoi-polloi." Not at all hard for her, however, for she never had had money!

Imagination could take the place of money, anyway!

It was fun to stroll on Fifth Avenue during her lunch hour. "Window-shopping" was almost as diverting as the real thing. She would pretend she had a check-book in her pocket, and a fat account in the bank.

She would study the clothes of the women who passed her, making mental notes of the most becoming styles. She would sometimes sketch these in the evenings, and later hunt for "remnants" in the bargain basements, to make a copy of a beret or a sports-coat. One could work wonders if one had clever fingers, and a flair for picking up the main points in an outfit that ordinarily would be far beyond her budget. That's where a dash of imagination, too, was useful.

The hat-shops were inordinately tempting. She would stand in front of a show-window filled with the latest models from Paris, sometimes even venturing recklessly inside the shop to try on a swirl of feathers, or a creation in that new shade of antelope or velour.

The flower-shops, filled with blooms from the South, were the purveyors of dreams. Wafts of perfume would drift out to the sidewalk. The fragrance of freesia and lily-of-the-valley, violets and mimosa could carry you off on wings from the chill of a New York winter to places of eternal springtime.

The fragile beauty of orchids set in trembling maidenhair fern could transport you to tropical forests incredibly strange and lovely.

Well, one day she would travel. One day her luck would change. Tarry would come to tell her that he'd made a killing in the Market, and they would set off on a honeymoon that would take them to Brazil ... Tahiti ... Rangoon.

CHAPTER XVII

Now, in the private room of the hospital where Mrs. Rules lay, Moira decided that if she couldn't get, at least she could give. She'd come in daily to cheer up the sick woman.

Was it coincidence—or wasn't it—that Dr. Rodney Stone usually dropped in at Moira's visiting hour?

He was so kind. Presently the bandages were removed from the patient's eyes. Mrs. Rules' only worry now was on the question of possible disfigurement.

"But the doctor does marvels in plastic surgery," Nurse Emmet told me so. Only I'm sure you won't need anything of the kind." Moira was far from sure, but the main thing was to cheer the patient, who had come to lean on Moira. Were the girl a few minutes later for the daily reading of the newspapers, the cheerful chat, Mrs. Rules fretted till she appeared.

"You'd make an admirable nurse," the doctor told her. He had just taken Moira through the children's ward. Her quick sympathy, her tact, her kindness were not lost on him. And one noon when she was leaving the hospital and he was stepping into his own car, he offered to drive her to her destination, and then suggested that they have a bite of lunch together.

She complied. Although it was mid-December, the air that day was almost like Spring. And the sun shone. She felt happy and protected. His presence was magnetic. He handled the car in the heavy traffic with ease and precision.

They swung West. Would he take her to one of the fashionable restaurants in the Fifties? Somehow, she hoped not. She wanted quiet—with him. An advancement of their friendship. It had grown to mean a lot to her. Something strong and steady.

He was silent as they drove. He brought the same dexterity to a neat turn of the wheel, the manipulation of the machine, as to the usual run of his work. She noticed that. The keen eye of the surgeon, the sure hand and nerve.

They went swiftly through the Park. Then Riverside Drive.

They drew up at an inn below whose windows were the shining waters of the Hudson. Beauty below and, inside, peace and quiet.

A waiter led them to a table by the window that was gay with tulips.

Dr. Stone picked up the menu card. "H'm! What'll we have? I suggest brook trout . . . new potatoes . . . green peas."

Over the Spring flowers, Moira nodded assent.

"And hold on a minute . . . a half-bottle of sparkling burgundy would go well. You have some here?"

"Certainly, sir," the waiter named a vintage, disappeared.

"It isn't often," smiled the doctor, "that I have a privilege like this. It needs a little celebration."

Moira was thinking: "He looks years younger and terribly attractive when he gives that gay smile." There was something so boyish in his manner—an air of playing truant—when he added: "It's as though one left one's cares in the hospital."

"She said: 'You work too hard.' 'It has to be done. But don't let's talk of work—sickness operations. Let's talk about you, Miss Moira.'"

She flushed. "I'm terribly humdrum."

But she was thrilled. That a man as important as the doctor could be interested—but it was only politeness, of course—

"I think you're a particularly nice girl."

It was spoken in no idle vein. His voice was quiet and sincere.

She stammered: "Thank you. I'm pleased, naturally. But in comparison to you—your work—I feel futile—inconsequential."

He looked into her eyes. She saw warmth, appreciation.

"When I see you bringing comfort to everyone in the hospital," she continued, struggling against her shyness, "the work I've found to do seems pitifully small. I never intended it, in the first place. I wanted something creative—like designing beautiful clothes—contributing beauty—developing my small talent in a wider field. And all I do is land in a beauty parlor. From the sublime to the ridiculous! Don't I sound silly?"

"It never occurred to you that if I mend broken bodies, you do a like job on the soul? That we're both doctors?"

She looked amazed. What had souls to do with beauty parlors? Was he referring to her visits to the hospital? The cheering up of his patient?

"Bringing beauty to tired or disappointed women is a mission. You never thought of that?"

"Most men in your position would think it was mere catering to their vanity. That it was frivolous work."

"There spoke some of the New England forebears!" He laughed. "That's the Puritan strain! This is a newer world."

"You mean—if I bring beauty to women—I bolster up their ego?"

"—And fortify them for the battle that living is today. Knowing that she looks well is a real spiritual tonic to a woman. Any psychiatrist would agree to that."

"So," said Moira, "out of your big-heartedness you glorify my menial job into something necessary and fine?" And she smiled. A vision of Deverney's Beauty Parlor rose before her. Had he any idea how the customers gossiped to the operators? What intimate revelations were given?

"I wonder," she said, "if your patients ever tell you the things they confide in us girls?"

He laughed outright. "That confirms me in my contention that you're a doctor of souls!"

The waiter brought the food and wine. He drew the cork. Poured the sparkling burgundy into two glasses.

The doctor said: "A toast!" Her heart rose.

"The mender of bodies drinks to the little mender of souls. May she go on cheering up the doctor, and may she count on his true friendship!"

Moira was worried about Tarry. Was he drifting away from her? Was she to lose him, after cherishing the image of him all these years?

The fact that, miraculously, he had got and retained a job on Wall Street, these dreadfully competitive days, had carried her through many a trying hour at the beauty-shop, and eased her disappointment in her own failure to achieve something with a future in it. She told herself that all the future she wanted was woven round Tarry now.

But—did Tarry really need her? He had told her that he loved her. "Take care of yourself, darling. You're very precious to me."

He would end their telephone conversations with assurances like that. Sweet words that thrilled her. She would go over and over them, in secret, like the beads on a rosary.

"Get to bed early, Moira. I'm busy. I'm working. It won't always be like this, darling. One day I'll have you for keeps. You know that."

Not in so many words had he asked her to marry him now.

But, she told herself, that sprang from his innate delicacy. When he had the means to support her, he would declare himself, as the old-fashioned saying goes. Not for him the modern fifty-fifty working marriage.

At other and depressing times she would tell herself that his assurances came too easily. Trite. It was as though he were stalling.

But when for days she saw nothing of him, and her telephone failed to carry his loved voice to her ears, she hardened her heart against him, schooled herself to a future without Tarry and his problems and his moodiness, but her resolution would be wrecked by the sudden appearance of him in the flesh.

He needed her.

He would fling himself on the divan, that turned into a bed, at night. Like the Greeks of old, he brought gifts. Peace-offerings.

Usually prosaic, practical ones. A steak. A . . . or a big glass

The Great Game of Politics

THE promises in the next conventions may be vague but there will be promises nonetheless. In brief, an issue has arisen supported by so many voters that the politicians cannot—or at least, will not—ignore it. Certainly the Townsend Plan has been strengthened by the Ham and Egg defeat, in which astute old Dr. Townsend took precious good care not to become involved. Instead, he pointed out the more glaring economic heresies of the proposed plan and lost no chance to emphasize the relative soundness of his own. The net result is that he is in better shape to get a vote next session. It will not pass, of course, but the showing is likely to be formidable.

THE fact is that since the election there is among those best qualified to judge more real apprehension about the ultimate triumph of either the Townsend Plan or some modified but still unsound variation thereof than there was before. For one thing, it is pointed out, no matter how emphatic the adverse majority, it has not the least effect upon the convictions of the supporters of these pension schemes. Neither arguments, nor votes diminish their ardor or weaken their faith and they are completely impervious to reason on this subject. For another thing, every year the numbers of those above 60 increase. Every year the proportion of elderly persons in the population grows greater. Every year the field for the demagogues who specialize along these lines expands. Every year the soil becomes more fertile.

TWO things, it is pointed out, contribute to this—one, the fact that because of the progress of birth-control education and economic conditions fewer babies are being born; the other is the increase in the span of human life, due to the progress of science, sanitation and general medicine. The Census Bureau figures, for example, show that twenty-five years ago the percentage of babies born in each 1,000 of population was 25.1. Today the percentage is just about 17. In the same period the average length of life has increased nearly fifteen years. The net of this is that the proportion of young people in the whole population has steadily decreased, while the proportion of oldsters has increased. "Rapidly, it seems," says Mr. Mark Sullivan, that "we are becoming a nation of old people."

HIS estimate is that while today there are 8,000,000 men and women over 64, forty years from now there will be at least 25,000,000. At the same time on account of the decreasing birth rate the total population—young and old—will have increased only 25,000,000 over the present 130,000,000. The question which these figures raise is this—if with only 8,000,000 "Senior Citizens," the politicians are already "moving in their direction," how long will it be, before they give way entirely and pension them all? It seems only a question of time. In that case the one hope of the nation is that some genius will evolve a scheme that will avert national economic collapse. None such has yet been proposed.

The affair was held in the William Penn Fire Company station, and other prizes included: Most original costume, Mrs. Charles Thorpe, Sr.; fanciest, Mrs. Edith Streeper; most difficult to guess, Mrs. Earl Foster. A variety of games were enjoyed, with favors awarded to: Mrs. Lucille Dunn, Miss Emma Dunn, Mrs. Leo McCarthy, Mrs. James Tracy, Mrs. William Vornhold, Mrs. Arthur Martindell, Miss Elizabeth McKay. During the business session, Miss Margaret Perry presided. A decision was made to purchase a large coffee urn for use in the fire station. The sum of $500 was donated to the fire company for a fund being built up to purchase new motor equipment. Final plans for the card party on Friday evening were made; and also for the covered dish supper and Christmas party after the December meeting. Forty-five enjoyed the social time which was followed by refreshments.

Akim Tamiroff has probably brought a greater variety of clever characterizations to the screen than any other living Hollywood performer.

But in Tamiroff's newest screen venture, the daring Paramount drama, "The Magnificent Fraud," opening today at the Ritz Theatre, he plays the best role of his career. He is seen as a dictator of a mythical South American country. Then he is seen as an actor who substitutes for the dictator. And while he is still in character as an actor, he gives his impressions of three great rulers—of Napoleon, of Henry VIII, and of Cyrano de Berg-

FALLSINGTON GRID TEAM TO CLASH WITH YARDLEY

FALLSINGTON, Nov. 15—Probably the largest crowd ever to attend a six-man football game will be on hand to watch Mike DeRisi's Fallsington Falcons battle Mike Derrick's Yardley High squad here this afternoon.

The occasion will mark the debut of Fallsington's new uniforms, which both schools will be represented at this contest in large numbers. For not only does the game inaugurate the Falcons' new uniforms, but more important is the county championship in the six-man class at stake.

Coach Mike DeRisi's Falcons opened their campaign—first season at the diminutive fall sport—with a 14-8 setback administered them by the Lambertville, N. J., six. But since then the Orange and Black has come back strong to win its last six games in a row and will conclude its regular season schedule with this fray.

On the other hand Yardley will go into the contest seeking revenge on the Falcons who beat Mike Derrick's boys at Yardley earlier in the season. What's more their prestige is at stake since they claimed hold on the mythical county championship in six-man football last year, and not only of the county but of this entire section in Southeastern Pennsylvania and New Jersey.

So there should be plenty of excitement on the Falcons' field when these two old football rivals meet again in old garb but under a new caption. Kick-off is slated for 2 p. m.

In The Pocket

By
TATTLER

After a rather hectic week yours truly is back to give you the lowdown on the lads who spill the maple on the local lanes.

Last Thursday evening Bristol sent a team to Salem, N. J., to take on a team from that town and although they were defeated, nevertheless they made a good showing. We hope and believe that our boys will turn the tables on the Jersey boys when they come here for a return match.

Tonight, a team representing Quakertown, is invading Bristol to clash with Mike Capriotti's boys. Amoco bowling in the National League, is composed of the following bowlers: Guy and Bruno Nonini, Focht, Milnor, Moffo, Capriotti and Amison. Come out and root for the "Gas Men" to win over our friends from up-county.

"Mike" Kondrya and "Art" Hirsch are really packing the lumber in their respective leagues. Mike and Art are both sporting a 181 average, which isn't bad at all. "Mike" Korkel is starting to give Mr. Hirsch a little competition at the present time.

Your tattler wonders if Bristol is going to be represented in any of the National or State Tournaments this year. Talk it up, boys.

The writer was unable to get around to the alleys much, last week and therefore has little in the way of local news. We will be back again next week though and hope to bring you a whole bagful of choice tidbits about who's who in Bristol bowling.

To Subpoena Earle

Harrisburg, Nov. 15—Counsel for former Secretary of the Commonwealth David L. Lawrence, on trial on charges of blackmail, conspiracy and election law violations, announced today subpoenas will be served on former Governor George H. Earle, and U. S. District Judge Harry E. Kalodner, of Philadelphia.

Judge Kalodner served as secretary to Earle for a time during the latter's administration.

EXPECT SLAM-BANG WIND-UP AT THE ARENA TONIGHT

TRENTON, Nov. 15—A slam-bang windup is on tap tonight when Emil Dusek, wildest of the famous "Riot Squad," will tangle with Joe Cox, the Missouri Dynamiter, in the feature attraction on Promoter Johnny Ipp's weekly wrestling card at the Trenton Arena.

Both men came through with unpopular victories in their last starts at the Arena but the favor of the fans will undoubtedly be with Cox. Emil defeated Abe Younst in a manner that was definitely displeasing to the fans, while Cox scored his first defeat handed against Red Vagnone in the latter's five starts here.

Cox and Dusek are strictly unorthodox matmen and tonight's battle will be the survival of the fittest. It will be a best two fall out of three, one hour time limit set.

Don Evans, handsome Hungarian, who made a highly popular debut last Wednesday, will appear in the semi-windup against Bud Boy Jack Brown, Louisiana rowdy. Evans downed Joe Maynard and then went to a corking draw with Abe Coleman, when Gus Sonnenberg, who was scheduled to wrestle Coleman defaulted, due to a rib affliction. Gus appeared in the ring but could not go through with the match.

Jim Casey, younger brother of the famous Steve Casey, will make his first local appearance. He faces Ralph Garibaldi, another younger brother of a famous athlete, Gino.

Wendy Black, newcomer from Georgia Tech, makes his first Arena appearance, meeting Ernie Powers, the Canadian lumberjack.

The first bout will start at 8:30 p. m.

Gives Practical Talk, International Problems

dom, was introduced by Miss Haines, who is director of the Department of International Relations for the local union.

Mrs. Solenberger told that the desire for peace is more strongly planted in the hearts of people of every nation now than ever before, and she believes this will eventually control actions in preventing war. She stressed the fact that no nation is entirely in the wrong nor entirely in the right. "We should consider and weigh the circumstances which cause these conditions."

In this most practical talk on international relations by one who is a student of such, she told of the distressing state of affairs in the world today. Mentioning the strange delay in active warfare Mrs. Solenberger claimed this a blessing, in that many lives have been spared by it, in comparison to the large number killed in a short time last year. The possible hope of manning planes with robots, thus further reducing loss of lives was spoken of.

Considering at length the causes of war—economic reasons, desire for colonies, etc., the guest mentioned that many nations could not be proud of the manner in which they acquired colonies in the past. She said that thoughtful people feel and hope that peace in Europe can only come about by an organization similar to the union in the United States. "We can aid by setting our own houses in order," she continued, mentioning the problems of unemployment, bad housing, and other things. Great need of tolerance on the racial question was stressed, this being one of the main problems in Germany at present.

Mrs. Harry H. Headley was the presiding officer, with devotions lead by Mrs. A. B. Sands. The soloist was Miss Laura Ellis; and refreshments were served at the conclusion of the address.
